My Dear Mr. Black:

I am bothering you again. I have been wondering whether I have all the issued of the DEARBORN INDEPENDENT which have contained Lincoln articles, and if not, whether I could obtain them. I have your series on Wilkes Booth running from March 21, 1895 to May 2, 1895, the Lincoln issue of February 7, 1925, issue of June 6, 1895 containing your article "The Mad Booths and Lincoln's Fate"; the Lincoln issue of February 6, 1926; issue of July 3, 1926, containing "Lincoln's Gettysburg Address" by Barton; issue of August 28, 1926, containing Barton's "Cause of Lincoln's Sadness"; issue of Sept. 11, 1926 Barton's "Did Lincoln Say It?"; issue of December 11, 1926 Barton's "The Girl That Never Came"; and the present Lincoln number February 13, 1927.

Have you an index of all the articles that some one in your office could run over? I would certainly like to get a complete file of the Lincoln articles if I do not have them.

I am led to write this as I gathered from a conversation of a few weeks ago that I did not have them all.

I was over in New York a few days completing arrangements with Dodd, Mead and Co. who are publishing a new book of mine this fall "Abraham Lincoln and His Relations to Railroads" and while there was entertained at the Republican Club by Mr. Hertz and Mr. White of the Tribune, both Lincoln enthusiasts. They spoke highly of your paper and the many articles concerning Lincoln appearing therein. In as much as I have not until recently been a regular subscriber I concluded that I have overlooked some of them, hence this letter.

Have you in preparation any additional matter concerning Wilkes Booth? It seems the ~~xxx~~ story of his alleged escape will not down?

If I can serve you at any time command me.

Cordially yours,

John W. Starr Jr.
